Ever feel like something's missing?

Imagine this question all around your town, city or village. On posters, billboards and flyers; in newspapers; being shared through social media. Together with an invitation, a call, to find life in Jesus.

The imagery and wording that together constitute the campaign identity have been designed by our friends at Something More Creative to be eye-catching; arouse interest; and be up front that the Life '26 mission is all about inviting people to find life in Jesus.

Visually the adverts playfully arouse interest with images of everyday objects with something essential missing, such as a tennis racquet with no strings or a road sign with no words. The big question asked in the headline engages with the growing awareness in the culture that something is missing.

There is a crisis of identity in our culture, and people are looking for a better story that gives them purpose, meaning, joy and peace.

Anecdotally we were hearing rumours of more and more people showing up at churches with the same statement: “I feel like something’s missing.”

The Finding Jesus research conducted by the Evangelical Alliance confirmed that this sense of ‘something missing’ is motivating many in their exploration of the Christian faith.

Ever feel like something's missing?

Purpose, peace, freedom, acceptance, truth...

We all find ourselves longing for these good things and so much more. And maybe we catch a flavour of them here and there. But what if we could find more than just a fleeting experience of these things? What if we could find love and meaning and hope and security, all we long for, in one place or person? And not just a momentary taste but a filling of the emptiness.

The campaign invites people to find the life, peace, purpose, hope, security, forgiveness (and more) that they are looking for by finding life in Jesus. Any word that reflects a blessing of the gospel – the life to the full that Jesus offers – can be used in the strapline.

Find the you are looking for.
